Note from the Editor

Well after a pretty dismal Spring I guess we are all hoping for a glorious Summer. Although I must admit that the spring flowers and grasses are looking stunning at the moment, must be all that rain!

In this issue, with a general election just around the corner, Polly Colthorpe gives us an amusing insight into what happens at the count. Also Simon Gibbons talks about what he an Deborah are doing to encourage more wildlife into the Churchyard.

Finally, please note the annual postal subscription rate has gone up to £8 due to increases in the cost of postage.

Poughill Churchyard 2024 - Simon Gibbons

Churchyards are very unique places not least because they are enclosed and have remained untouched, often for several hundred years. Our own dates from the 15 Century, so you might like to reflect on just how long it has stood there and the history it has seen. To start with, the gravestones themselves provide a lesson in geology as different stones are quarried from different locations, and have, of course, taken millions of years to form. Being mainly upright they are ideal places for lichens to grow and these themselves, although not particularly spectacular, are very unique and special things being a combination of a fungus and a special type of algae, neither of which survives without the other.

The enclosed area of the churchyard forms an oasis of flora and flora. With this in mind this year sees the start of something different in our own Churchyard. It has been decided to allow parts of the Churchyard to remain uncut this summer to allow wild flowers and grasses to flourish and see what is going to show itself. This will benefit insects, birds and small mammals such as hedgehogs and voles, etc. With luck we might also see the return of the barn owl, which is frequently seen in the nearby meadows.

Miniature daffodils have already been planted on each side of the entrance path and made a fine display this spring. Hopefully more will be added to this coming autumn. Plans are also in hand to add crocuses, snowdrops, and more primroses. In the future bird and bat boxes may be put up in the adjoining trees and shrubs.

Obviously graves are intensely personal and some of the more recent graves are attended and cared for by relatives on a regular basis. Care will be taken to allow mown paths to these.

If you feel for any reason that your access has been restricted or want to make any other comments, or indeed want to be involved in any way, please contact Simon or Deborah as listed below.

We are at the initial stage of this village project and are very much finding our way so any thoughts would be welcome.

Village Hall Report - Julian Wild

I write this report on a glorious, sunny and dry Spring day on which it's hard to think of the long months of cold and wet behind us. Many of the things the Hall Committee have in mind, now the wall and the roof are all done, appear in the Minutes of our meetings as "to be looked at when the weather improves." These things include; more repairs to the Hall's fabric, a thorough redecoration, improvements to the (now cleared) outside area, and - the big one - a new Kitchen. We will need good Grant support to cover the costs of the changes we have in mind which will make the use of the Hall a more attractive experience. Community involvement is a keystone in Grant applications, and we will be seeking your views and wishes. Expect a questionnaire sometime soon!

Sadly, I have to report that we have experienced some thoughtless vandalism at the Hall, with one of the special outdoor benches made by Nick Moon damaged beyond repair. Also, trespassing on the flat kitchen roof has caused internal leaks.

On the Events front, it has all been very foodie - something the Committee does rather well, or so we are told. A lot of this is down to the remarkable skills of Adam Clarke.

On Saturday 24th February we had a Curry Night with a selection of dishes produced by members of the committee which sold out in advance (as well as take-aways). One of the most successful ever nights in the Hall.

On Sunday 24th March the Buffet Breakfast returned, again very busy, with everyone arriving at once! But it settled down, and many a resident revisited the chafing dishes. The new, rotating toaster went down rather well too.

On Sunday 21st April the, now traditional, St George's Day Roast of Chicken, Pork, and all the trimmings, followed by a selection of Committee made puds. Another sell-out.

By the time you read this, all being well, there will have been another Coffee Morning (with big cakes) on Saturday 18th May.

Thinking it was time to give our appetites a rest we've decided to move away from food and try a Bingo night! We don't have a date yet, but look out on social media, posters and the blackboards for details.

Also, no definite date yet, but we hope to have a barbecue in the playground in July - weather permitting!

Pyncombe Poughill Educational Foundation

The objects of the Foundation are to promote the education (including social and physical training) of people resident in Poughill parish under the age of twenty-five years, and in need of financial assistance.

Applications are dealt with sympathetically and in the strictest confidence. The charity is run by seven trustees who meet three times a year. The date of the meeting is advertised on the village noticeboard and on the village website. Grant applications are welcomed from anyone meeting the criteria of the charity. The amount awarded is decided by the Trustees – so please supply as much information as possible. It is possible to apply for more than one grant.

Application forms are available at the back of the Church. The next deadline for receipt of applications is 12th June 2024.

If you have any queries please contact Helen Morton (Secretary) 866038.

Cheriton Fitzpaine Community Shop News

The CFCS Committee would like to express our thanks to all our volunteers, past and present, for everything they have done and continue to do for us. Their dedication and hard work enables the continuation our this valuable asset within our community. A massive thank you must also go to the mainstay of the shop, Kevin, our Shop Manager, for everything he does within the shop and behind the scenes.

A considerable amount of work goes on behind the scenes to ensure that the shop is sustainable and meets the needs of our community. The Shop Committee meets every 6-8 weeks to discuss the running of the shop, the financial situation and how we can support Kevin.

We are specifically looking to protect our future in light of the sad closure of the Methodist Chapel, on whose land we are situated. Thanks to everyone who filled in our survey on 'The Way Forward', which will help inform us on our next steps. We will be providing an update on what we're thinking at our next Annual Member's Meeting, which all shareholders in the Community Shop will be invited to attend. Whatever path we take within the next year, it will be a huge challenge. We will certainly need to look at our financial situation and, to this end, we are actively researching potential sources for grants and funding and will be holding various fundraising events.

In this time of massive change, we need more help now than ever. We are looking for people who have a bit of time and the energy to help us in various ways;

- Fundraising - do you have suggestions for fundraising events and/or could you support us in running them?
- Do you have skills that could help us in our relocation project?
- Are there any accountants out there who could support our Treasurer in putting the project Business Plan together?
- Do you have strong communication skills to help us write regular updates and provide a link with the local press?
- Would you be interested in joining our committee?
- Could you spare an hour or two a week to volunteer in the shop?

If you are interested in learning more, please contact lyn.porter@icloud.com.

Poughill Parish Council Chair's Annual Report - Karen Wellerd

I'm happy to say that for the first time in quite a few years there have been no changes in personnel over the last 12 months. I would like to thank my fellow councillors and our Clerk for your commitment, it is much appreciated.

During the year we have been able to award grants to the Village Hall, for a Coronation event and to assist with general repairs, and to the Playpark for their RoSPA inspection. Once again, we would like to thank our residents who give up so much of their free time to help run our local community organisations. The work they do is appreciated by all and goes towards making Poughill such a special place to live in. To assist them with this valuable work we have a small amount of grant funding available again this year, which we would encourage them to apply for.

We would like to thank those residents who have attended our council meetings and contacted us with their concerns. Our responses have included arranging to lift the crown of a tree in the churchyard to allow better access to the graves and liaising with Highways to carry out a repair to a damaged drain outside the Glebe.

We have continued to produce the quarterly newsletter, which is still delivered free of charge to all households in the Parish. Although the sharp increase in the cost of postage stamps has meant we have had raise the postal subscription rate to £8 per annum.

Looking to the year ahead, we will be working with a couple of residents who have approached us with a proposal to 'wild' the churchyard. This will be on a trial basis in small areas of the churchyard in the first instance, with a view to expanding the areas if it proves to be successful.

Finally, we are looking forward to continuing to represent our residents and doing what we can to improve the well-being of our community over the coming year.

Tales from the Old Bill : 6 - Simon Gibbons

Luckily for me not everything was a complete disaster. True to form it seemed if anything of any note was going to happen it would be in the early hours of the morning. It must have been more towards summer time as it was just getting light, when the radio jumped into life to report an armed robbery in progress at a local garage. amazingly it was only around the corner from where I happened to be and I immediately drove there which, in retrospect, was a pretty foolish thing to do. On arrival the poor garage attendant who was clearly pretty shaken up, was still babbling down the phone to the Police operator. He did a double take when I stepped into his office, looking first at the phone and then at me, as if somehow I had materialized from down the telephone line. Apparently I had missed the offender who had roared off in a car, by about thirty seconds. It seemed the Gods of innocence had again been looking over me. Perhaps it was a reward for shunning all those offers from the ladies of the night.

Like me, the garage man had been looking to finish his all night vigil and was in his office counting up the night's takings which amounted to several thousands of pounds, when he had heard someone come into the shop area of the garage. He had got up and walked around the desk he had been working on when a masked man with a handgun came crashing into the office and screamed at him to "Sit down!" giving him a mighty shove to the chest.

It's always odd how life always outdoes anything Hollywood or fiction has to offer as, in a hundred to one chance when he was pushed, the man ended up sitting on his own desk directly on top of all the bundled cash he had been counting only seconds before. The office safe was in full view, yawning wide and empty. The man again screamed at him for the money and with an amazing presence of mind he told him he had missed it by a few minutes as 'the manager' had just left with all the nights' takings. All that was left was the float in the till.

In a flat panic the robber grabbed a handful of notes and coins together with as many ciggies as he could stuff into his jacket and fled back to his waiting car. As I've said there was almost no CCTV in those days, so again using a human skill known to garage attendants the world over the victim simply looked out of his window and noted the car registration on a scrap of paper as he sped off. As I passed the details over the radio the CID turned up which was the one and only time I ever recall seeing them outside their office. In time honoured fashion they sneered at me, whipped the scrap of paper out of my hands and left, telling me to "Get a statement." The fact that I had been up all night and my shift had finished didn't enter into it. I duly took his statement, in longhand, and got back to the station about two hours later to find the culprit behind bars, and several CID officers doing the old “Ashes to ashes” impersonation with their feet up on the desk and truthfully, a bottle of scotch on the desk. They looked jolly pleased with life.

Having checked the car registration they immediately went round to the keeper’s address. Today there would have been a stand-off for half a day whilst a fully armed Tactical Firearms team was assembled and deployed but as they didn’t exist in those days (your average British Bobby simply didn’t carry guns) they did the next best thing, which was to kick down the front door. Inside they dragged the offenders’ brother out of bed for a bit of stiff questioning. It wasn’t exactly rocket science. On the living room wall was an extensive display of replica handguns. One of them, as clearly denoted by the faded wallpaper, was missing. Within minutes he had spilled the beans on how he had ‘lent’ it to his brother, obligingly adding where he could now be found. A short dive to another street found the address supplied, with the suspects car still smoking hot outside it. Despite not even having a pair of handcuffs or truncheon between them they booted that door off its hinges as well and found the offender cowering inside, complete with replica handgun, the money from the till and the fistful of ciggies.

Naturally they all wanted to know the million-dollar question of why he had used his own car to do a robbery, why didn’t he steal one like any other self-respecting robber. Again the answer just couldn’t be made up. The robber had a cunning plan, which would have put even Baldrick to shame. His masterly brain was working on the principle that the Police would never believe that any one would be so stupid as to do a robbery using their own car! Clearly he hadn’t met Plymouth CID or he would have known that their combined intellect would never have stretched to such sublime subterfuge!

Close Cousins - Derryck Morton

We live in an exciting time piecing together human evolution. Besides the fossils, modern radiometric techniques and DNA methods are transforming the understanding of our ancient past. Humans (Homo sapiens) are the most common and widespread species of primate and the last surviving species of the genus Homo. The chimpanzee and the bonobo are our closest living relatives but that has not always been the case. The human line split from the chimpanzee lineage around seven million years ago. Fossil evidence relating to this split is scarce, though there is sufficient to map out basic ancestry. One of the most famous bipedal hominins is Australopithecus afarensis known as 'Lucy', who lived around 3.2 million years ago. She was named by the discoverers when the Beatles' Lucy in the sky with diamonds was a chart hit. She is of the genus Australopithecus, a forerunner of the Homo genus.

By around two million years ago, several australopithecine species like Lucy had evolved and spread across southern and eastern Africa. One form of australopithecine gave rise to the next phase of human evolution, the genus Homo. There have been many species similar to us and some co-existed with modern humans in Asia and Europe as recently as 40,000 years ago. We know of more than 20 hominin species that are part of our family tree and at least half of these species are based on fossils unearthed in the last 30 years. Homo sapiens originated in Africa around 200,000 years ago, before dispersing around the world, reaching Australia by 12,000 years ago. The fossils suggest that rather than springing fully formed from Africa, typical modern human characteristics instead built up over time. They also suggest that there may have been at least two waves of migration out of Africa - one dating back to around 100,000 years ago and another to around 60,000 years ago. Outside of Africa, we are all descendants of those who left in that second wave of migration.

But it's not until Homo erectus came on the scene about 1.9 million years ago that we see the long-legged form, similar to our own physique and with that came a more significant increase in the size of brains, dominated by a swelling of the cerebral cortex. Between 1.8 million and 700,000 years ago the average brain size of Homo erectus doubled.

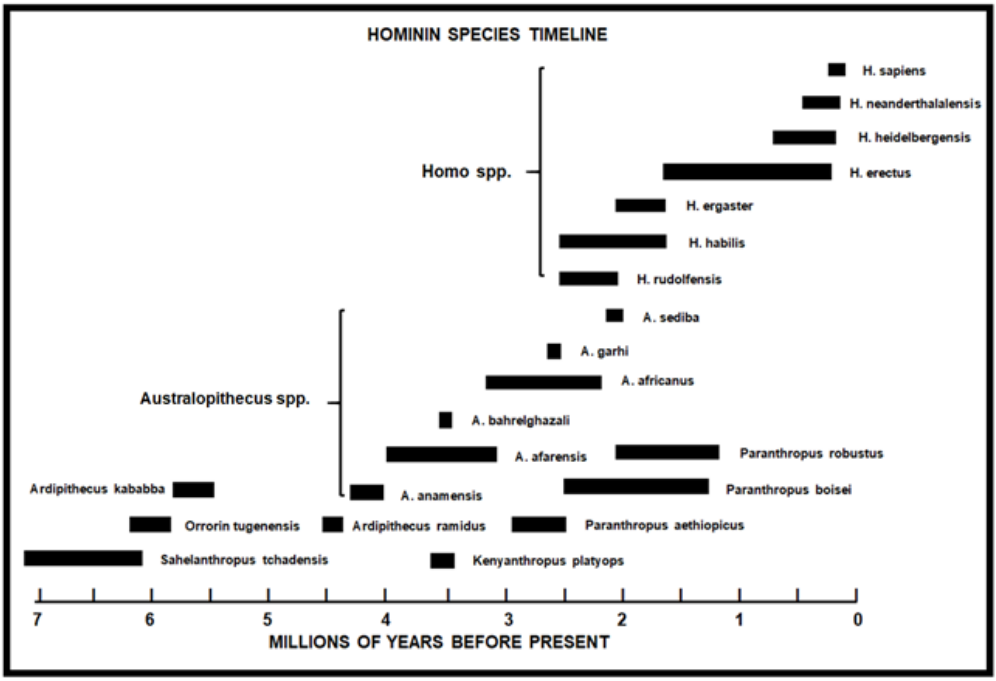

The Neanderthal species is commonly referred to as the archetypal cave man, even to the point of it being a derogatory term. Homo neanderthalensis or H. sapiens neanderthalensis (dependent upon future research into them being a separate species or a sub species) are an extinct group of hominid who lived in Eurasia until about 40,000 years ago. The first discovery was found in the Neander Valley in present-day Germany in 1856. There is scant evidence for a common ancestor with modern humans though studies have produced various times ranging from 315,000 to more than 800,000 years ago, nevertheless, they differed little from our species which were living alongside them.

Exploration of our DNA reveals a total of 12% Neanderthal, distributed as about a 2% average in each individual living on today. This represents a fifth - perhaps even a half - of what makes a Neanderthal different to us. The highest levels are found in the far east and very little in Africa. This points to regular interbreeding between species over a vast range of time and space following the 'out of Africa' excursion. The inherited genes may link to problems in the digestive tract, diabetes and over-clotting of the blood but also benefits when venturing into cooler northern territories; skin infection defence, protection against the bacteria that cause stomach ulcers and help coping with seasonal low levels of UV radiation are a few.

There is abundant evidence through archaeological sifting of cave floor layers that Neanderthals used caves habitually, often seasonally, lit fires, used charcoal and rock paint and napped flint tools. One grave even suggests a degree of ceremony at the interment. They were not so different to ourselves. The artist Tom Björklund paints Neanderthal people not as biological specimens but credits them with qualities that humanise them. Take a look at his work.

The diagram below shows the positions of 21 hominins according to their spread in time. It does not represent lineage and there is much work to do in defining our genetic heritage.

Further reading: The Natural History Museum has an absorbing web site on the subject and the book Kindred, by Rebecca Wragg Sykes is an excellent publication of facts.

Counting the Vote - Polly Colthorpe

Given the recent elections – and the brief snapshots we get to see of the all-important counts afterwards – I thought a bit more about the count might be interesting if you've never been involved in one.

Usually held in a sports hall against a background of nets, goal rings and multi-coloured lines on the floor, the count will generally be staffed by familiar faces from your local district council who have already put in a working day at the office. Unsurprisingly, some councils choose not to count until the next day or even the following weekend; there is a county-wide shortage of suitable venues so, if the one your elections officer had an eye on has been booked for the Badminton Club's tournament since last year, the count may simply have to wait a day or two. Assuming the count does begin on the day of the election, the hall will have received a makeover since close of business – it takes dozens of tables and chairs, quantities of election stationery, acres of display boards and pounds of boiled sweets to keep the election roller coaster rolling through the night.

When the polls close at 10.00 p.m. the boxes are sealed and driven to the count. The first boxes can arrive within minutes if there is a polling station nearby but the first box through the door almost certainly won't be the first box counted. Seals checked on arrival, the boxes are grouped by ward and stacked to await the relevant count. When it is called, the seals are checked again before they are cut and the contents of the boxes tipped out on the tables for the 'verification' – checking that the number of ballots in each box tallies with the polling station's record of the numbers who turned up to vote.

All candidates have entry to the count and you may be allowed an agent or at least a supporter – the latter discretionary and dependent on the capacity of the venue. Hopefuls will begin to gather as soon as the count is open; experienced campaigners will arrive later, laden with extra sweaters, sandwiches, cake, thermos and chocolate – it's going to be a long night, the heating isn't used to working overtime and you have no idea when your count will begin. Over the next hour or two, encampments of brightly-coloured rosettes will become established in enclaves round the walls, migrating to and fro across the hall as rumours of runaway success on Table 8 or unexpected popularity on Table 21 spread, are followed up and (probably) disappointed. The rosettes straggle back to base-camp and comfort each other with coffee.

The tables usually run end to end down the hall, each numbered and with three or four tellers seated down each of the long sides. Somewhere there will be a wall of display boards on which you may be able to find the name of your prospective ward and the number of the table at which your count should take place but, since the count can only start when all the boxes for that ward or division have arrived, you may have a long wait – drivers transporting the precious boxes have been known to get lost in the stygian darkness of Mid Devon's more rural wards. At even the best-run count it is not unknown to see tellers sitting round an empty table, waiting.

At most elections, the elector may only vote for one candidate - as was the case at the recent Police & Crime Commissioners elections – and the vote is counted in the simplest possible fashion. A box is emptied on to the table, the tellers' hands reach for the ballots, unfolding and smoothing them out as they go and sorting them by candidate voted for into wire baskets. As the votes pile up, someone will empty the basket, square up the pile of ballot papers and count them face up. When one hundred is reached, the teller will turn the pile over and count the ballots again from the blank side. If the ballots still total one hundred, the pile is secured with rubber bands and becomes a 'bundle'.

The language of the count is peculiar unto itself and a 'grass skirt' doesn't immediately suggest the large sheet of paper printed with a grid which is the most commonly used way of counting votes in elections where the voter may vote for more than one candidate. In Mid Devon those will be district and the larger town council elections where most wards have two or more councillors. With up to 25 ballot papers attached to an adhesive strip running across the top of the grid, it's easy to read off and record the distribution of multiple votes and, with its fringe of ballots attached, it's obvious how the grass skirt came by its name. In Mid Devon's elections office, the staff cherish a Euro election ballot paper which measures about 18'' from top to bottom – to date their all-time champion!

The British electorate is inventive in the art of defacing – and invalidating – its ballot papers. My favourite example of this was perpetrated by someone who, unimpressed by any of the candidates on offer in a very rural constituency at the 'Foot & Mouth' election of 2001, added the local N.F.U. rep. to the names on the ballot paper and voted for him. All such spoiled or illegible ballots are set aside and, before each count is declared, will be shown to the candidates by the elections officer for agreement that they be recorded as spoiled. Sometimes the officer and candidates can agree that the voter's intention was clearly to vote for Candidate X and that ballot will then be counted for Candidate X.

So, you've lost your rosette somewhere, probably in the celebrations when that chap … well, you never caught up with his name but he held Wurzeland St.Tracey by eleven votes after a recount. You know you'd never have the nerve to ask for a recount. There's no coffee left, you're wishing you'd brought your old winter cardigan and still Muddling South hasn't counted. The crowds are thinning out; most of the display boards now carry results and you notice that Muddling North was declared over an hour ago. The result does not increase your confidence. Someone kindly tells you that Muddling South is going to be counted at Table 2 on the far side of the hall and, not for the first time, your heart misses a beat. This time it really is Muddling South. There are several bundles beside the wire tray which still bears a slim sheaf of ballots with crosses against your name and you try to count the other candidates' bundles. It has several times been explained to you by the branch secretary (elections) that you were really, really lucky to have four opponents and, astonishingly, it seems that the branch secretary (elections) may have been right.

The returning officer, only glimpsed at a distance previously, hurries up to you with a clipboard and an apologetic expression. 'So sorry to keep you – never known so many recounts! Yes, we can do the declaration now – is this microphone still working …..?'

WELCOME TO THE POUGHILL VILLAGE HALL 100 CLUB!

The Poughill Village Hall 100 Club is a great way for you to support the Village Hall with the added bonus of the chance of winning a cash prize every month! Here's how it works…

Simply complete and sign a membership form and return it with your payment to the address at the bottom of the form.

This buys you one or more membership numbers which will be entered into the monthly prize draw. Each number costs just £1 per month. Please note all participants must be age 16 or over.

The monthly draw will take place at the Poughill Village Hall Committee meeting (usually the first Monday of the month).

The total prize money will be 50% of the membership fee taken that month. The remaining 50% goes to the Village Hall. The more numbers we sell, the higher the cash prizes.

If you are interested, please email poughillvillagehall100club@gmail.com for an application form and a copy of the full rules.

JOIN OUR 100 CLUB TODAY AND YOU COULD BE OUR NEXT WINNER!
